GROUP EFFORT

With 36 minutes on the clock the Reds celebrate going 3-0 up against Fulham last month. Fernando Amorebieta's own-goal and a Martin Skrtel header were followed by the first of two superb finishes from Luis Suarez - in this case the culmination of a sweet move involving Steven Gerrard and Jordan Henderson.

MIKE'S HOME

Hollywood actor Mike Myers was at Anfield to see the 4-0 win over Fulham. He was born in Canada to parents from the Old Swan area of the city and says: "I feel very connected to the people of Liverpool - I just got off the plane from London and I get a grin on my face. It's just great to be here. It's always emotional."

"BEING MANAGER OF LIVERPOOL FOOTBALL CLUB IS A PRIVILEGE NOT A PRESSURE"

Manager Brendan Rodgers talks candidly about his club's progress and prospects halfway through the 2013/14 campaign. William Hughes takes notes these type of matches are not easy games. West Bromwich Albion should have beaten Chelsea away. They did beat Manchester United away and they've drawn with Arsenal at home. Afterwards people weren't talking so much about how good we were but perhaps that West Brom weren't so good on the day. But we have made games like those look easier than they probably are and that's a great credit to the players. We're moving towards the philosophy we want but we've still got constant improvements to make, even in victory.

How important in your match preparation is the work of the opposition analysis department?

Chris Davies [head of opposition analysis] and his team do excellent work for us. You usually have a good idea of how an opponent will play through their history and sometimes the history of their coach, but you're always looking for the finer details. Chris and his team will prepare extensive analysis of the opponents tailored to the things we look at. We focus on various moments of a game and look at their offensive and defensive organisation and offensive and defensive transitions. We're very thorough in how we look at that and then see how that can help us prepare to exploit opportunities in the game. I will also watch the opponent on my iPad to see if there's anything else I can pick up on, and so we enter into the games fully prepared.

"The idea is to give our fans exciting football that gets them off their seats"

In terms of using the data in our training programmes, we correlate information with the medical and sports science departments to analyse and assess the players physically and of course we'll look at tactical and technical elements too. The analysis department has been very good at creating individual DVDs for players to provide motivation and reinforce their qualities. They can also provide specific DVDs on our opponents. There's a great deal of work that goes into helping us be the very best that we can be.

You want players to have courage on the ball, and the last few home games have seen some exhilarating one-touch moves in tight areas in the final third of the pitch...

Absolutely but that's the easy part of the pitch in terms of being brave because in those areas you can't try things in terms of your invention and your fantasy. For me, bravery is a player willing to go and receive the ball off the goalkeeper or centre-halfs 20 yards from his own goal. It's brave to go and get the ball there to start your attacks rather than making it a percentage game by kicking it long upfield all the time. The bravery in the players and the courage they've shown is very good and with our work they'll hopefully continue to improve.

in training?

I would like to think that if a player has the right mentality, he can always learn. That's from the youngest players to the senior players. I've seen development in Steven Gerrard - you can look at his pass-completion rate now and his ability to dictate the game. You still see his quality. He played for 65 minutes against Fulham and was exceptional. He still has the qualities to dictate a game but... can see his maturity all the time and that comes from his experience and his ability to learn what we're trying to do... see improvements in other players too. Look at Martin Skrtel and... see someone who has proved me right. He hasn't proved me wrong. I think he's proved me right. Last year I felt he was rash and made mistakes. Now he's arguably one of the best central halves in the Premier League. He's composed. He looks bigger on the pitch and he's been brilliant during this run. He's had in the team, so hopefully that will continue. He's another international captain, who's still improving. Jordan Henderson is somebody else who think I've made progress. So... see improvement in the players, but that's down to them. As coaches and managers we are tools to make them better - the key is whether they want to learn and thankfully I have a tremendous group of players who have a real hunger to succeed and hopefully they feel they're getting better.

There has been a lot of debate this season
about the fact that only 30% of Premier League starting lineups are made up of English players
- where do you stand on the issue?

I think it's important to have a core of players from the country you're working in. If I worked in Italy, I would want an Italian core, or in Spain a Spanish core. Here it needs to be a British core. But when you're one of the leading clubs in the world you're always monitoring what's out there in world football. We would hopefully be able to attract some top European and international players. I've always been open-minded and have enjoyed working with players from Britain, Europe and further afield because I enjoy the fusion between the British mentality and the qualities brought in from other nations. But again, depending on the culture of where you are working, that's where the core of the team has to be from. And so for me the heart and soul of what we do has to be British.

"We're moving towards the philosophy we want but we've got constant improvements to make"

How do you use international breaks?

It's a mixture of working with young players at Melwood, planning ahead and trying to watch games. During the most recent break we had all the youth-team players joining in with the small group of senior players who weren't away with their countries - Luis Alberto, Philippe Coutinho, Aly Cissokho and Brad Jones. It was a good opportunity to see the kids and because I do a lot of the coaching, a chance for the other staff to coach and work with the players. We enjoy good communication between the Academy and the first team and it was a chance to work and talk with Alex Inglethorpe, Neil Cutler and the other coaches. Our youth team had just returned from Seville where the young players had a chance to add to their experiences. It's very much a one club mentality and that's something that's important to me.

We also spend some time reflecting and preparing for the next opponents, analysing them and assessing our game and what we can improve in order to get results. The November international break isn't ideal but as a club manager you have to accept it and use the time wisely.

You have said it will take a few transfer windows to get the squad you want. How happy are you with the current group?

In every window you want to reinforce the team. Think the recent history of the windows show that we have moved on and progressed each time. In January this year we improved the team with Coutinho and Sturridge. Then in the summer we improved it again by bringing in Simon Mignolet, who has been excellent along with other players - some for now and some for the future. We are keen to bring in young players as it is important to look after the club's future. If we can be in a position to strengthen again this January that will be great, but we'll have to wait and see.

You seem to handle the pressure of the role well - is the club's past a help or a hindrance?

Pressure for me is the family where the mum and dad aren't working. It's coming up to Christmas, they want to buy presents for their children and they haven't the money. Being manager of Liverpool Football Club is a privilege not a pressure. The pressure is only that which I put on myself to win and to be the best that I can be. The club's history and tradition was the reason I came here and you can never rest when you're one of the leading sporting institutions in the world. You don't have the time to have a breather! You have to be the best you can be and the history of the club dictates that. But that's my character and what I want to be. I had a great chat with Kenny Dalglish recently where we were talking about the current and the past. I really embrace that because it's a great motivation for us but it shouldn't hold us back. It will only do so if you're weak in your mind. We have to be a modern club while always respecting the history and retaining the strong values instilled by Straker, Paisley, Kenny and all the greats. But we have to have a sense of the present and the future as well.

Do you and your staff break the season into sections when it comes to reviewing progress or is it an ongoing process?

difficult to review it regularly over the course of 38 games. We wanted to make a good start and after 10 games I think we could say that it was a good start. That was a good benchmark. Then we will look at the five games from Fulham to West Ham. Then, very quickly, there are four games from Tottenham away to Chelsea away which takes us to the end of the year and the 10-game mark. By the halfway point we'll have played everyone else and have a greater measure of where we're at. I think it's important to look at your goals that way and strategically try to map things out. It's very difficult to forecast because you never know what the opposing team will bring. What you can do is try and prepare so that you bring your A game to each fixture. And if we can bring our A game into the majority of our fixtures, we will win them.

Are you pleased with the progress made by the first team throughout 2013?

So far I think if you trace it all the way back there was a little bit where I first came in as a manager with the transitional phase at the beginning. You learn very quickly at the big clubs that there is no brushing aside because you've got to win games. But perseverance is one of the biggest attributes you can have and we persevered and since January our form has been really good. I would imagine it would see us comfortably up there in the top four in terms of the calendar year. But the measure of the good karma is that you've got to sustain it. We've sustained it for a period and stayed in season very well. What we have in the team now is a resilience. In my time here we've never lost two league games on the spin and that's a factor in the consistency and winning mentality that we're trying to build. Whenever you fall, you need to get up as quickly as you can and go again. The way we've done that is something that has pleased me. I'm pleased with the progress because we've sat second in the league but while there's a space up above us we'll continue to fight.

Being Brendan Rodgers

As the boss says, there's no time for a breather when you're in charge at LFC. Just recently, among many other official engagements, Brendan Rodgers unveiled a plaque to mark the opening of the new interactive Liverpool FC Story museum at Anfield (right). A few days later he was at Rainhill High School for the opening of a new third-generation or 3G pitch (left) that will benefit the local community as well as students. With him were past and present Rainhill students Jordan Be, Jordan Rossiter and Lloyd Jones. The school provides GCSE education to the club's under-12s to U18s, BTEC qualifications to the U18s and

Why not have a winter break after the festive fixture period?

Didi

HAMANN

During my time with Bayern Munich I spent almost every Christmas skiing in Austria with my family. I wouldn't return to training until around 6 or 7 January, then the season would resume a week or two later. It doesn't sound like a long break but it definitely felt that way. All of the squad would come back in a good mood, relaxed and refreshed. You could clearly see bit.ly/1W00000

During that same period this season Liverpool will travel to Man City and Chelsea – two of the best teams in the league – before hosting Hull City and then starting their FA Cup campaign.

I know that years ago in England there was a league game on Christmas Day and the return fixture 24 hours later. That eventually became impractical and, like having no winter break is now going the same way.

Tradition in this country means there is always loads of football around the festive period and supporters really look forward to it. I have no problem with that. In fact I used to really enjoy it because the atmosphere at a Boxing Day or New Year's Day match was nearly always superb.

As someone who always preferred

playing to training, it suited me to have so many fixtures – there simply was no time for practice sessions. We'd warm down after one game and move on to the next. It was a quick turnaround.

If it was up to me I'd keep that traditional element of the fixture calendar. I'd have games on 26 December and then on 1 or 2 January before halting the season until mid-January. That would allow players time off to put their feet up or maybe go away for a few days. Everyone would benefit – the clubs and the national side. I don't think a winter break is the only reason why Germany regularly does well in major tournaments but it's definitely a big factor.

While players in the Bundesliga or La Liga are recuperating, those in this country are right in the middle of a vital period. With so many points available in a short space of time you can really tell yourself up for a strong title or top-four challenge.

The problem is that playing without a pause – and in such a physically demanding environment eventually catches up with you. Although I know the situation when I arrived in England, having no winter break still looks some getting used to. For the first and second year it wasn't actually too bad. But after that, especially in seasons that concluded with a World Cup or Euros – I did notice the impact.

It will be the same for any Premier League player who goes far with their country in Brazil next summer. The tournament ends in July and some lads will have started pre-season nearly 12 months earlier. That is far too demanding on the body of any athlete.

Together we are limitless

That was the motto of the Liverpool Ladies team under Matt Beard, the FA WSL manager of the year, who tells William Hughes the hard work has only just begun

Having had time to reflect on it, as manager of Liverpool Ladies FC how pleasing was 2013?

It was a fantastic season. The players deserve enormous credit because they are the ones who have performed week in and week out and implemented our game plan. Even when we did get beaten, they have shown enormous amounts of character in the way they have responded. My staff also deserve great credit for the work that they've put in. Now that the season is over and we've sat down and reflected on it, it was a big achievement. For me the major benefit was having the opportunity to work with the players every day. That meant we were fitter, stronger and more organised, and really that just came down to contact [interviewer: laughs]

People have spoken about how quickly the team bonded as a group - was that also a key factor?

Yes, definitely. We've done a lot of classroom-based sessions where we would sit down with the group. They came up with their own team ethos which was the focal point at the end of the year and became a motto: Together We Are Limitless. We've done other bits and bobs around that with regards momentum and strategies. Away from the football environment the players bonded and they used to go for coffees and dinners together and so on. That does help because it's like anything else - you do a lot for your friends.

I've been working with the development squad [younger prospects] recently and I told them that, including five females. It took us 14 games to get our game plan right. We're going through that same process now with the development squad and it's important right the way across the board - from the first team squad to the development team to the Centre of Excellence - that the players have the same ethos and work as hard as they can.

Being champions will bring different challenges...

It's going to be a different pressure for the players and myself to deal with but I'm confident we will do that. We've got a lot of experience in the team with players like Corine Schröder, who's 28, Tyla [Dowse] is 25 and Fara [Williams] is 29 and that will help us. I'm confident within the group and we're also looking to strengthen the team and add more competition and better quality which will make sure the players are kept on their toes. And if they're not performing it will give us the ability to change it. It's a challenge that we're looking forward to. We've got Europe to concentrate on as well next year, so there are lots of other added factors coming into the new season.

Is it a help or a hindrance that the Champions League comes in the autumn once the FA WSL season is over?

I think it gives everyone something to look forward to as the season progresses which is important because it is a long season. The only reason we start back for pre-season in January is because England have the players for almost four weeks during the build-up. The Champions League is exciting for us to be a part of and win it.

Least winter you made a dozen signings - is it more a case of a

Small team with a big team

Ben Davies

Yes, I think so. We're in the process of tying players down from the current Liverpool Ladies squad while we look to strengthen. There are some good players available and we've got players in mind but they've got to be of the right character as well which is really important. We don't want to disrupt the togetherness that the group has got. By mid-December we should have everything confirmed and it's always better if the whole group will be there when we come in for pre-season. If you're adding new signings at the last minute, it means you've got a lot of work to do with those players.

This time last year it was a hard sell to get players to join the squad. It's been a league two years on the spin. But a lot of the players bought into what we were trying to do and where we were trying to go. This year we are asking players to join the champions and we have an advantage in that we are in Europe whereas Manchester City aren't and neither are Notts County or Arsenal.

One player moving on is Whitney Engen...

Unfortunately yes. Whitney's a contracted player with the USA national team. She is one of 30 players who has

with the trophy

"Any new signings have to be the right character for this group"

a central contract with the American national team and the US have told her she's out of our hands.

You selected captain Gemma Bonner as your player of the year and she's now made the breakthrough into the full England team...

I'd worked with Gemma at Chelsea when she was just 18 years old. She's consistent week in week out. She's not one of those who will scream and shout at people but leads by example. I remember we were doing a 'YoYo' test in pre-season, soon after we'd announced she would be the captain. One of the younger players was struggling with the test and Gemma went and ran with her and gave her encouragement and it just showed me that it was the right decision. She's a great character, is still only young and her maturity for her age is fantastic. The captaincy has helped her progress as a player as well because she's obviously got an added responsibility. I'm delighted that England have seen her as a player. In my opinion, she's the best domestic centre-back in our country. She's that good. When we first spoke about the captaincy she wasn't going to take it. She was a little bit worried because there were some senior players in the squad like Whitney, Fern and Tati, but I'd like to think it was the correct decision. If you look at how she's performed, and she lifted the FA WSL trophy at the end of the year, which

The FA WSL will continue to get stronger next season...

It will probably be the toughest season domestically for years and years. Lincoln Ladies have moved to Nottingham to become Notts County and are going in as a full-time football club. We've seen ourselves this year that while we've not been full time we've trained every day because we've had access to the facilities and we've reaped the benefits of that. Manchester City are coming in too and not many teams in the world can compete with their financial resources. Arsenal have always had a strong budget and will take stock of what's happened this year and Bristol and Chelsea will strengthen again.

That's why it's vital that we continue to progress as a club. We had some very good publicity last year both on and off the pitch in terms of what we were doing but we can't stand still. There are financial rewards if you progress in the Champions League and if we can bring in the players would like, then we'll be a stronger team than we were last year which will put us in a better position going forward.

Was it important for the women's game in this country to break Arsenal's dominance?

I don't know. They got pushed all the way in the first year of the FA WSL too which was exciting for the league because it went down to the last day. They dominated it in the second year because teams couldn't compete when Alex Scott, Katie Chapman and Gemma Davison all came back to Arsenal after spells in America and they ran away with it and rightly so. Vic Akers [Arsenal's general manager] has been talking about the money Man City will bring into the league, but Arsenal have been in that position for the last 10 years. They've always had the biggest budget and the best players. Now other clubs have invested and it's become more competitive which makes it entertaining. Look

A champagne reception from Ladies midfielder Katie Devine-Winter

"We had great publicity last season but we can't stand still"

at the men's Premier League. At the recent international break Arsenal were top and Liverpool second and who would have expected that at the start of the season with the money Man City have spent? It's exciting and it's going to be good going forward because it will be interesting to see how Arsenal react and respond as a club.

How important is it to produce good young players for the first-team squad?

It's massive. When I came in to Liverpool I spent two months with the players, inherited and it was clear within that period that the majority weren't good enough to compete at FA WSL level. We really started with watching lots of games and speaking to players. We spent the past couple of months getting to know the younger age-groups. On Monday nights I've been helping with training at the Centre of Excellence to get to know the Under 11s, 13s, 15s and 17s and they're excited by us winning the league. Then I've been working with the development squad on a Thursday and going to their games on a Sunday so the break is invaluable to get to know the rest of the set-up which is important.

Can Liverpool Ladies reach the latter stages of the Champions League?

I think so. I do feel that with the players we've got and those we are hopeful of recruiting, we'll have a chance of getting to the latter stages of the tournament. We've got players who have played in it before in Fara and Natasha, and Corinna Schröder's won it with Duisburg. Then our international players have played in European Championships and World Cup qualifiers and that experience will be key in our preparation and helping the players who haven't played in the tournament before to understand what's needed. It always helps if the draw is relatively kind and top, but I would be confident that we can realistically target the quarter-final stages.

"IT SHOULD BE TOUGH FOR YOUNG PLAYERS TO BREAK INTO THE TEAM"

But Raheem Sterling also realises that it pays to learn from pep talks with Kolo Toure, the passion of Luis Suarez and the hard work of Jordan Henderson. Simon Hughes listens in Raheem Sterling arrives in mudkissed football clothing without footwear and a little out of breath. He is slightly late for the interview at Melwood but comes a reasonable explanation: the kind of explanation that you want to hear.

Today is no different to any other. After training there is more work to be done. He shoots with his right foot. He shoots with his left foot. Raheem practises chipping shots, curling shots, hitting them hard.

Sterling is not alone. On this particular morning team-mates Jordan Henderson and Jordan Ibe were there too, standing in the rain, moving in the rain, shooting in the rain.

Henderson has said before that he does not see this as a sacrifice at all. It is just part of being a footballer. But then, not every player at every club has the same attitude.

So you're taking on extra shooting practice...

...enjoy it. I'm always out with the other boys (Ibe and Henderson) and always scored goals in the youth teams but when you step up [into the first team] there are fewer chances and it's more difficult to get into good goalscoring positions because the opposition is better. You realise that you have to be more clinical, hit the ball really hard and be accurate too. You also really realise that if you score goals as a winger, it puts more pressure on the manager to play you. It's a part of my game. I'm determined to get better at Jordan does a lot of extra work in training doesn't he?

Jordan [Henderson] is an example to all the Liverpool squad, not just the young players here. He is a really good kid and very down-to-earth. He's worked so hard to get to where he is. Obviously the ability is there but if you don't work hard it doesn't mean much. He's worked really hard in every part of his game, he is in the gym every day. He deserves his place. For me, that's the way you want to be. He never stops

Jordan previously told us the extra practice gives him more confidence on the pitch.

We've got great players and big personalities upfront in Suarez and Sturridge so you're always going to look to them. You know if you give them enough of the ball, they're likely to cause problems and score goals. As you get older, you get more courage to maybe take the responsibility yourself. It comes with time, the confidence to express yourself. I feel that's coming.

What's it like to share a pitch and a dressing-room with Luis?

He's one of the best players in the world. We're really happy to have him at the club. For a player like me, it's a privilege to watch him every day. I've lost count of the number of nutmegs he does in training before putting the ball in the top corner. You can learn from him but to be honest you can't copy the stuff he does because only he can do it. The biggest thing is his hunger to work hard for the team. Even with all that ability he never stops.

You are 19 this month and heading towards 50 appearances for Liverpool [at the time of writing].

Honestly didn't realise that. Since making my debut in the Liverpool first team, haven't set myself targets. At first I looked at my appearances and thought, wow, I'm doing this quite young. But for the last 12 months I've been focused on getting a regular place, so I haven't thought about it too much. Until you've played hundreds of games for the first team and hopefully won a few medals, I suppose it doesn't really matter. Although it's nice to be where I am in terms of appearances, what I really want is to get back into my rhythm like I felt I was at the start of last season and hopefully nail down my place in the side.

Since becoming a part of the first team set up 18 months ago, what have you learnt about yourself and about football?

There have been quite a few ups and quite a few downs. I've learnt that every day is a learning curve both on the pitch and off the pitch. You begin to understand quickly that although you're a first-team player, that's when the real hard work starts. When I was younger it was just about playing, scoring goals and enjoying it. There is an added pressure that comes with it now. Coming through the youth team,

Interview with Raheem Sterling

"I want to get back into my rhythm like I felt I was at the start of last season"

you don't really realise this until you're there - what the expectations are in terms of consistency. You have to be on it every single day. You can't afford to relax. Quickly, you have to grow up fast and learn.

Senior pros like Steven Gerrard always say that success is determined by how you deal with setbacks. Is that true?

I think that's a good statement. In football every player has good times and bad times. It's how quick you respond to bad times. You assess it and have to move on quickly. All the time I'm thinking what I could do better. Obviously ability is a big part of football and being successful. But you also need to be tough in the mind. I'm lucky that there are a lot of senior pros here I can learn from. The biggest thing I've seen is that everyone is down-to-earth. There are lots of good people - think the manager has done well to get the right balance. For a young player like me, it's great to have big characters like Kolo (Touré) and (Mamadou) Sakho around the place. Kolo's always talking to me about football - what he thinks I'm good at, where I can improve.

Having played a lot of games last season and now so many this season, how do you deal with that?

If the team is winning without you, you can have no complaints. The team has been winning. We're doing well. Obviously you want to play more. That's why you're a footballer. But the only way you can respond is work hard in training and be consistent. That's the reality of being a Liverpool player. It should be hard for young players to break into the team. All you can do is make sure when an opportunity does come along you take it and make the manager think about you. The Christmas period is coming up and there might be some rotation. I'm hopeful that a chance will arrive.

Football is about taking opportunities isn't it?

came in at 17 against Manchester City and I'd like to think I took my chance that day because I've been at Melwood every day since then. City were champions. They had and still have a lot of world-class players. But you can't think about that. It's all about what you do, your attitude. This season I've played some games in positions that I'm not used to. In the last five years I've probably played most games as a left winger. The defensive side of the game definitely needed improving. But this season I've played right-back and right wing-back. I learnt a lot in doing that - where to run, where to hold your position, the positional sense. It doesn't matter where you play. You have to do your best and prove to the manager you're up for the fight. I'm happy to play wherever the manager puts me in the team and take the opportunity.

You are playing regularly with the England Under 21s, however realised I got my debut with the seniors really early. Continuing my development with the Under 21's is really good for me. It's easy to forget I'll still be eligible to play for them for a few years yet. We're doing really well at the moment, moving the ball well. It's a good group of players who all get on well. It's exciting to play with players as good as Ravel (Morrison), James Ward-Prowse. Hopefully we can all move up together.

Right on cue

Rahman paid a visit to a community group in Liverpool recently to drop off a unique Christmas present - a pool table which had been housed at Melwood for several years and signed by Steven Gerrard, Luis Suarez and manager Brendan Rodgers.

Rahman presented the table to young volunteers at the Toxteth Fire Fit Hub that provides young people from across the city with world-class facilities in a safe, stimulating and fun environment.

Afterwards he enjoyed a quick game of pool and watched a game of five-a-side on the centre's outdoor pitches. The Hub is one of the Liverpool FC Foundation's recognised youth centres, and the table is a genuine piece of sporting memorabilia with a certificate of authenticity from the club.

There was so much expectation when you arrived in the Liverpool first team. Is it difficult to be the same person you've always been?

It's always the same kid. I've never read much of what is said by other people – just the ones that matter. When I was at the Liverpool FC Academy, I'd play my game and afterwards I'd hear some positive comments from the commentators and that was nice. But I never really thought too much about it. I don't think it went to my head. Even when I made my first-team debut for Liverpool, it didn't really change. I listened to my mum and listened to the manager. They are the people that count.

What's the best thing about being a young professional footballer?

Waking up every day knowing you'll be out on the pitch, knowing you're going in to play the sport that you've wanted to do for as long as you remember. When I was younger it was everything I wanted to do. It's a

And the most difficult?

I suppose it has to be when you're not playing. That's the worst time. Every footballer wants to contribute towards a winning team like the one we have here at Anfield at the moment. If you don't, then it feels like you're missing out.

ANDERLECHT (H) WON 3-0

European Cup first round first leg 25 November 1966

On the night when Liverpool first sported an all-red kit they also overcame their first formidable obstacle in Europe thanks to a double-stroke of tactics and psychology from the boss. Most of the Anderlecht side had represented Belgium in a recent international against England and Bill Shankly was impressed with what he'd seen that night — but he told his players they'd be facing a team of no-hopers. Liverpool ran out in a new strip that Shanks reckoned made them look seven foot tall and that wasn't the only surprise. Despite wearing the no.10 shirt a young Tommy Smith was deployed alongside Ron Yeats in the centre of defence. The visitors had expected him to line-up as an inside forward and the Reds took advantage to build up a first-leg lead with goals from St John, Hunt and Yeats, after which Shankly told his players. WON 4-0

First Division 17 October 1987

This was the game that saw Kenny's case of 67-88 hit top spot in the First Division for the first time – doing so in exhilarating style. Full-house signs were commonplace and for the vast of morning league leaders Queens Park Rangers the Kop gates were locked an hour-and-a-half before kick-off. Those lucky enough to get in were treated to a team's new attacking lumina with Craig Johnston had earlier broken the deadlock and John Aldridge scoring in a record-breaking 10th consecutive league game, added a second. Barnes then took centre stage. His first came following an exchange on the edge of the box with Aldridge and he completed the scoring by winning the ball on the halfway line and skimming past two defenders before side footing into the bottom corner.

BOLTON WANDERERS (WEMBLEY)

WON 2-1

Coca-Cola Cup final 2 April 1985

The only silverware of Roy Evans' reign as manager was secured on an afternoon that many regard as Steve McManaman's finest in a Liverpool shirt. Mecca's magic left mesmerised the Bolton defence throughout. Twin Towers and it was his two solo goals that clinched the club's fifth victory in the competition. Opponents Bolton may have been a division lower but they arrived at Wembley with a reputation as giant killers. For many in the Liverpool team this was their first experience of a big cup final occasion but on the day they proved too strong for the gallant Trotters. It took something special for the Reds to beat Bolton. It was McManaman who glided past two defenders before beating the keeper with a perfectly placed effort. His second came in the 68th minute when he cut in from the left before curling a low shot into the far corner. Although Alan Thompson pulled a goal back Liverpool hung on for victory and McManaman walked away with the man-of-the-match award.

67 BARCELONA (H) WON 1-0

UEFA Cup semi-final second leg 19 April 2001

For the new generation of Liverpoolians this was a taste of how it used to be. With the Reds on the cusp of a first European final since 1985 interest in the game was immense. The clamour for tickets had not been seen since the 1960s and 70s and the atmosphere was also a throwback to the glory days of the past. With the tie evenly poised at 0-0 there was everything to play for and it was Liverpool.

Liverpool's triumph at Anfield was a true testament to the club's resilience and the passion of its fans.

area following a corner and veteran midfielder schemer Gary McAllister held his nerve to successfully beat a young Pepe Reina from the spot. At the opposite end Sander Westerveld produced a stunning save to deny Rivaldo and as Barca pined on the pressure after the break the atmosphere became more and more electric. Steve Bruce's brilliant goal in the 80th minute secured the win for Liverpool but the Reds defence held firm and a place in the UEFA Cup final was secured. The great days of old were back.

MANCHESTER UNITED (H) DREW 3-3

Premier League 4 January 1994

Three down to your greatest rivals after just 23 minutes, with a capacity home crowd staring on in disbelief and millions watching at home on TV – this was not how Anfield anticipated welcoming in the New Year in 1994. Manchester United were threatening to run riot and an embarrassing defeat looked all but certain. What followed was one of the most thrilling revivals in Liverpool history. A minute after Denis Irwin added to earlier strikes by Steve Bruce and Ryan Giggs by netting United's third, Nigel Clough pulled a goal back then struck again before the interval. The visitors had chances to wrap up the points after the break but with a vociferous Kop willing them on Liverpool eventually got their reward when Neil Ruddock headed home to complete the fight-back with 11 minutes remaining.

65 ARSENAL (H)

WON 4-2

First Division 23 November 1986

The footballing headlines in November 1986 belonged solely to one man and it was this victory that cemented Jack Balmer's place in the record books. The previously much-maligned inside-forward had registered successive hat-tricks in Liverpool's preceding two games and now stood on the verge of footballing immortality if he could repeat the feat against Arsenal. It all surprisingly all ended when on Anfield to see if Balmer could deliver and it was he who opened the scoring with a penalty after 5 minutes. The Gunners hit back the moment needed again to draw Liverpool level everything was set up for a unique moment in history. An air of excitement took hold of Anfield and Balmer didn't disappoint. Just seven minutes after his equaliser he put the Reds ahead and the cheers that greeted this goal were reported to be the loudest Anfield has ever known. Stubbins later added a fourth as Liverpool moved two points clear at the top of the table but there was only one name on everybody's lips afterwards.

BENFICA (A)

European Cup third round second leg 21 March 1984

In what was the biggest gamble of Jose Fagan's managerial tenure to date, Liverpool overhauled their illustrious hosts with one of the most impressive displays produced by an English club in European competition. The Eagles of Lisbon may not have been the force they were when winning two European Cups in the 1960s but to beat them so emphatically in front of their own fans sent a warning out to the rest of the Continent. By withdrawing Kenny Dalglish into a deeper lying midfield role Fagan got his tactics spot on. The English champions weathered an early storm before turning on the style and, assisted by the eccentric goalkeeping of Bento, first-half goals from Ronnie Whelan and Craig Johnston put the outcome of the tie beyond doubt. Nene managed a consolation for the hosts but further goals from Ian Rush and Whelan again ensured that the pride of Portugal were soundly beaten.

63 ASTON VILLA (WHITE HART LANE)

WON 2-0

FA Cup semi-final 28 March 1974

Liverpool upset the odds to secure their first appearance in the FA Cup final. White Hart Lane was the neutral setting but against the reigning cup holders and a club that could boast five previous cup triumphs, Tom Watson's men had been given little chance by the London press. The wily Watson duly delivered a rousing pre-match team talk to inspire his men. Greaveson inside-forward Jimmy Nicholl was the goalscoring hero, with team-mate Bill Wootton tormenting the opposition. Cue wild celebrations among the fans who had journeyed south and those back in Liverpool who craved success in the FA Cup.

It may have taken 43 years but when it finally arrived, revenge was sweet. The Inter ghosts of the San Siro that had haunted Liverpool since 1965 were laid to rest. Rafa's Reds led 2-0 from the first leg but progression to the last eight of the Champions League was no foregone conclusion and Inter were confident of repeating the result of their predecessors' four decades previous. Once again a hostile reception greeted Liverpool in Milan but backed by a victorious army of travelling fans the visitors were professional and clinical in equal measure, delivering the sucker punch of an away goal in the 62nd minute. Fernando Torres was the scorer, expertly firing home from a Gerard pass. This he was over and Liverpool had taken another proud European scalp to avenge Shrimley's darkest hour.

EVERTON (H) WON 3-2

First Division 21 November 1970

Two goals up with 20 minutes left, reigning champions Everton were coasting to victory until the most stinging of derby comebacks locked in. Against an inexperienced Liverpool side with seven derby debutants, goals from Alan White and Joe Royle had given the Blues what looked to be an unassailable lead. Evertonians were already celebrating victory until rookie winger Steve Heighway pulled a goal back after 66 minutes. Liverpool pressed for an equaliser head of John Toshack. The Kop burst into song with a rousing rendition of 'You'll Never Walk Alone' and with the decibels inside the ground growing louder by the minute the Reds continued to attack. With 50 minutes remaining full back Chris Lawler slammed home a sensational winner (right) to snatch victory and Anfield duly erupted.

IN HIS OWN WORDS

Carra the pundit

we enjoyed watching him on TV. As he's become accustomed to the set-up he's got better and better. Going in there to work for such a big company with millions of people watching at home must be really tough at first. You know everyone is scrutinising you. Jamie's a natural, which I always thought he would be. He's really liked by viewers and I'm pleased it's going so well.

Not having him at the club was strange when the season started. Everyone knows we're close. Jamie Carragher was always the first person I looked for in the dressing room and around the training ground. He was always there for me. So for him to be gone took some adjusting to. Although he's not with Liverpool anymore, we've still got a good relationship and obviously that won't change.

Since he left, I'm probably not as close to anyone else. We tightly taken a back seat among the group. That doesn't mean I'm not there for the players. I'm got on well with all of them, the young lads and those who are nearer to my age. As captain, use my experience to help everyone and guide them along. That's my role. They know they can always come to me if they need advice.

What Fergie said

To be honest, initially I was a little disappointed by what he wrote. I have a lot of respect for Alex Ferguson and the job he did at Man United. As a football fan, I know how big a figure he is in the game. But since then, I haven't lost any sleep over it. This is a man who's praised me many, many times and tried to buy me so I can't take those comments too seriously.

He brought a book out and had to say certain things to sell it and make the Manchester United fans happy. That might be why he chose to have a go at me and Liverpool. One day I'd like to bump in to him, have a chat about it and see what he really thinks. I'd ask him if he's changed his mind on me as a player.

For me the most important thing is that my current managers - Brendan Rodgers and Roy Hodgson - rate me. Their opinions are all that really count.

The future for England

The FA is trying hard to improve the situation. That's why they've set up a commission to increase the number of English players playing at the highest level of club football. I think it has to start from the bottom of the game and go right to the top. There is no point in making small changes

"It's not just about talent – you have to possess determination and drive"

It has to cover all levels. For me, Germany are a great example to follow. It's quite a while since they made the type of big decisions I'm talking about regarding player development. The fruits of that are there for everyone to see now. They've got an impressive national side and lots of players doing well in the Champions League. It takes time to happen and people need to be patient. Long-term, though, the goal has to be bringing through enough quality players to help us win six European Championships or World Cup.

What it takes to make it

There isn't just one answer. It's a combination of

I think you have to be born with some talent, then if you get the right coaching along the way that helps you to develop and improve.

I've already mentioned the system of player

At 16, with Liverpool FC Academy goalkeeper Mohammed, goalkeeper, defender, striker, winger and forward development changing. You can't just rely on that. Players need to take responsibility too, no matter what age they are. You have to possess drive. You have to make big sacrifices and you have to possess something inside you that pushes you on to make it to the top.

Jamie Carragher is a prime example of what I'm talking about. He had talent and he was coached and improved. But he also had that intense drive to be the best player that he could and make it in the game. There are other footballers too, like John Terry. They have that self-motivation and the heart required to be the best.

I've seen probably thousands of players who, in terms of just ability, were definitely good enough to make it. Some of those lads had more ability than me and plenty of other professionals I know who have had great careers. But what they didn't have were the other elements that you need, such as that determination to work hard or a willingness to make the sacrifices. As a result, they fell by the wayside because talent alone simply isn't enough. You have to do everything required to make the most of it.

The next generation

When I was growing up, my life was all about the game. My dad and brother were huge Liverpool fans and that had an impact on me. Football was a priority for all of us and I was encouraged to play. I had kits, boots, balls and everything else. Nowadays, kids have computer games, the internet and lots of other distractions, so it's no surprise they aren't as engrossed in football or go on to pursue it. That's not their fault, but it must have an impact on the number of players coming through.

Without whom

I've got a lot of people to thank for getting me to the point in my career. Of course, I've made the sacrifices I mentioned earlier, put plenty of graft in and played the games. However, without the likes of Hughie McAuley, Dave Shannon and Steve Heighway at Liverpool along the way, I couldn't have done it.

Then there is also the guidance and help from my dad and brother and close family around me. You can't get to the top without other people. It's not just an individual accomplishment. From a very young age, I always had a drilled in to me that football is a team game and that is definitely true.

First trip to Anfield

The first time I went to Anfield will always stand out in my mind. It was a League Cup game against Coventry

City in 1986. Steve Heighway invited me along and sorted out the tickets for us in the old Kenilyn Road stand [now the Centenary Stand] – remember walking in and seeing the pitch under the lights. It looked amazing and gave me such a buzz. It was a strange game. Jan Molby scored three penalties.

That was my first taste of what real football was about with big stadiums and big crowds... realised there was an expectation on the players. It gave me more hunger to study the game and follow Liverpool even more closely.

During that period my frame of mind swung quite a lot, from high to low. At one point I thought: maybe this isn't for me, maybe this level is too much. Then I'd play again and think, yeah, this is for me... feel comfortable. I can handle this and I can still improve. Slowly I grew in confidence and it went from there.

Never stop learning

Every player is human and will make mistakes. People always ask about the big matches that went right and ~~the big matches that went right and~~ that I've learned more from the games where I haven't played well or I've made an error. When I've come away from those games and had to analyse where I've gone wrong it's taught me more and drove me on to improve.

"Often you learn more from the games when you haven't played well"

The new players

~~When I've come away from those games and had to analyse where I've gone wrong it's taught me more and drove me on to improve.~~ for us in goal. Trying to fill the boots of Pepe Reina, who was a huge figure at this club for a long time, can't have been easy. Simon's made some brilliant saves at important times in matches and his performances were a major part of our good start to the season. He works really hard in training and I've been very impressed with him.

Mamadou Sakho is still young. He's only played a handful of games and the more he plays the more comfortable he looks. The big contribution he made to France's qualification for the World Cup will also benefit him. I think he'll prove to be a good acquisition for us.

Kolo Toure has brought a lot of experience to the squad, which is important when you are trying to ~~do it well and in a number of different positions.~~ done it. Whenever he's played he's done well, and in a number of different positions. Kolo's been a big influence on the young lads in the squad already. He's helped me too. With Jamie gone it's good to have another player of similar experience come in.

The boss

Brendan Rodgers took on a huge job at a very young age. It was a difficult time to come in at Liverpool and it was going to take a while for him to get his way of playing across to the whole squad. I think that's happened and everyone here now knows what's expected of them. You have to give him a lot of credit for what he's done directly. We finished his first season in good form and then started this campaign well. I think we've got a really good manager. He's always talking to me about my game and his own role too. He'll explain what he has to do or how he approaches different situations.

A vintage Red

As you get older I think you appreciate playing more. I've certainly found that. It's partly because experience makes you realise how privileged you are to be in this position. At times it's not easy. There is pressure and sacrifices and you need to keep delivering. At Liverpool and England, everyone wants the best. Only wets are good enough. But I know I can't go on forever and want to make the most of it while I can.

My Foundation

Football has been really good to me, so basically I wanted to give a little back to the city that has helped me so much. I think I can use my contacts in the game to help kids who are in a less privileged position.

Working with the Foundation [for more information please visit www.stevengerardfoundation.org] has made me appreciate my life. It's made me realise how lucky I am to have my health and for my family to be healthy. It's a real eye-opener when I go in to a hospital or some of the other places we've worked with. You get a close up look at some of the BBC Children in Need medical cases that are going on on a daily basis. Being able to give a little bit back and help them in any way is very humbling.

To the future

Every player that gets well in to their 30s naturally starts to think about what they will do when they retire. We all know we can't go on forever. I'll definitely consider following. Come into punditry. Management is something else that, right now, appeals to me too. If the opportunity to be in charge of Liverpool ever came along I'd be interested. Before then a lot would have to happen. I'd have to show I was a good manager because the club only wants the best.

I also need to have a certain level of experience. I'm not sure if I would take a job lower down the leagues first. I can't say for certain. What I can say is I've already got a decent knowledge of the role from the great managers I've worked with in the past. And right now I'm learning lots from Brendan and Roy.

At the moment though management is not my priority. I'm a player and I'm confident I've still got a few more good years left in me. I want to achieve things with this team and I think we can. That's my only focus right now and that's the way it should be.

Interview: John Hynes

GIVING A BIT BACK

The Reds' skipper played his part in the BBC's recent Children in Need appeal, appearing with Lucas and Luis Suarez in a short film thanking schoolchildren up and down the country for their hard work and dedication in helping to fundraise millions of pounds for the charity.

The boys visited Anfield Juniors, a partner school of the Liverpool FC Foundation, to take part in fundraising activities including egg-and-spoon races and football skills sessions. They each had their own mini-teams, comprising 10 kids in total, with Lucas' line-up coming top – cheered on by Liverpool FC's official mascot Mighty Red as well as Pudsey Bear.

As part of the partnership Anfield Juniors is involved in a new Foundation project called On the Ball, which aims to use the power of the LFC badge to positively impact on attendance, aspiration, attainment, health, wellbeing and confidence. Steven said on the day: "BBC Children in Need is a fantastic charity and it's great to come out and support the work that they do."

Ray Kennedy

was a mark of Boot Room genius when Ray Kennedy was converted from a striker with a healthy goalscoring ratio into an equally effective left-sided midfielder.

Having registered 71 tries in 212 games for Arsenal, the big Georgie arrived at Anfield on the same day in July 1974 that Bill Shankly - the man who signed him - retired from football. "He is big, brave and strong," Shankly told the media. "Ray's signing means we now have the greatest strength in depth that we have ever had." By the end of 1975/76 he was a League and UEFA Cup winner, and over the next five years Kennedy missed just five First Division games and accrued three winner's medals in the European Cup. In 393 Liverpool appearances he scored a creditable 72 goals.

1. League champion with Phil Thompson and Ian in May 1980.
2. All smiles after scoring in a 5-0 rout of Derby County in October 1978.
3. Frustration and despair during elimination from the 1978/79 European Cup at the hands of Nottingham Forest.
4. Shooting v Bayern Munich in the goalless first leg of the European Cup semi-final of April 1981.
5. And shaking hands with Bayern's Paul Breitner before his goal in the second leg secured a place in the final.

GUÐMUNDUR MAGNUSSON & ANNIE BALDURSSON STATISTICS

Guðmundur was born in Reykjavík where Liverpool's first European game took place in 1984. I chose Liverpool to represent me when I was 10 years old in a computer game called Match Day and that was the point of no return. I've been in the IT business for close on 20 years, and started compiling stats in 1990 when I was working on the website for the Icelandic supporters club. It quickly developed from there.

Today as well as fictionstory.net we run three off or websites: shanky.com, boboskey.com and jillykiddell.com, and we will add our fifth in the near future. We'll soon release an iPhone app too.

Annie: For a living I translate shows like Breaking Bad and weekly Premier League programmes for an Icelandic TV network. Liverpool's history was introduced to me by Derek Hodgson's 1980 book The Liverpool Story. I can't explain why it resonated so strongly and stirred this great passion. It was somehow meant to be.

I was introduced to pure stats through Brian Peck's records book. I've never been fascinated with stats alone but more by the stories that surround them. For example when writing The Liverpool Encyclopedia I discovered that when Liverpool won the First Division for the first time in 1900/01 they were only top of the league on two occasions – the first day of the season and the last.

We commenced work on the book in October 2012 and finished in August 2013. Even though the subject matter is close to one's heart the process can be tortuous – the writing takes every spare minute you have outside your normal job and sometimes you work long into the night.

GUY MITCHELL POSTERS

Im a London Red and always have been. My brother is eight years older than me and also a big Liverpool fan, so as you can imagine I copied him and wanted to join in the fun. I went to my first game aged 10 in 1908, the Chanty Shield. My first Anfield experience was seeing us beat Coventry City 4-0 in 1933 with a Wallers' hat-trick and a flourish 25-yard screamer!

Form a young age, I always considered LFC to hold a certain dignity and be a club for the fans. As soon as I visited the city, was hooked. I could really relate to the family values that the supporters have even if their beliefs supported football. I visited the stadium in 1996, modern age a lot of the still stands I collect many things including shirts badges, programmes, stickers and cards, and as you can see from the photo I have thousands all organised into folders in a wardrobe – also have thousands of magazines in my loft. But my main obsession at the moment is posters or pictures of the whole team – have close to 500. As well as the obvious ones from Shoof, Match and Goal magazines, my favourites are the summer photo ones made in the 1970s.

and 80s and often found at the time for sale in Woolworths or Athena.

My friends who support LFC value an interest in my collection. My wife just about puts up with it and understands that everyone needs a hobby!

"I have 500 team posters – my favourites are the large ones from the 70s and 80s"

AGED REA STATISTICS

Atending my first game as a four-year-old and witnessing the Kop in full flow. I was bitten by the bug. I can still remember sitting in awe in the Main Stand to this day.

I was always interested in numbers at school and kept scribbles of match reports. This developed into compiling stats and lists of all things JFC. So I had records of Liverpool FC before I was invited by the club to do what I do now.

As well as all the books of stats that I've compiled I also have a collection of Rothmans Football Annals dating back to 1970. I must use at least one of them every single day.

for every Liverpool goal scored. The excellent www.lfcstory.net website has done a fabulous job tracking down most of them, but I would've loved the reporters of the day to have looked into their crystal ball and seen how important a goal-time stat was going to become in the future. For anoraks like me.

My personal 'holy grail' will be all the stats and snippets of information from Liverpool's 18th league title. Hopefully they will not be too long in arriving.

I have a room full of books and an extensive computer database. Some friends and like-minded people are impressed and fascinated by both the quantity and quality of information I have collected. Some close family

"I wish there was a record of times for every goal scored"

GERARD SCULLY MEMORABILIA

I watched the 1971 FA Cup final and when Steve Heighway, who just happened to play for the Republic of Ireland, scored the first goal it sealed my allegiance to Liverpool FC. For a guy that was born on 13 April 1960, when Liverpool beat Manchester United 1-0 with a St John goal, I was fated to support them.

It was a slow start, given that I was geographically-challenged living in Ireland and only eight years of age. My mum and dad were bewildered by my interest in this foreign game. In Ireland at that time the Gaelic Athletic Association, which promoted hurling & Gaelic Football, effectively waged a

'ben' against all but their games, so my interest was treated with a degree of suspicion.

Over the next decade, my passion for the club grew. Just after the 1974 FA Cup final, I saw an advert in Shoot! magazine for the Manchester Programme Shop and after persuading my mum to buy me a postal order, I sent for the programmes from the game.

Today, I collect scrapbooks, annuals, badges, cigarette cards, postcards, player shirts, autographs, tickets, videos, CDs, DVDs. If I has Liverpool FC on it, I'll collect it. My most treasured item is Bill Shankly's track suit from the 1972/73 season. I'd love to track down the programmes for the 1814 FA Cup final v Burnley and the 1922 Charity Shield v Huddersfield, and also the programmes from the USA tour matches in 1946 and 1948, store programmes in A4 boxes and folders. The cards and tickets are sorted alphabetically in specially-designed plastic sleeves and placed in ring binders. A lot of what I have is catalogued in boxes so that I know what I have and what I'm missing. I originally had the collection in a converted garage, but when I got married, I moved to a house with a garden. My only concern now is that I am running out of space.

My wife is very understanding and even allowed me to re-mortgage the house many years ago to purchase some programmes from 1892. I've obviously influenced my six-year-old daughter to some degree because she's now quite careful about the programmes that her friends collect.

JONNY STOKKELAND'S STATISTICS

It's been Liverpool for me as long as I can remember, and that is back to the early 1970s. I became an active member of the Norwegian LPC supporters club in the autumn of 1980. Torbjørn Flåten, now editor of The Kopite and www.liverpool.ltd.no, helped me to buy some old history books, and then came Brian Peck's Complete Record book in 1985 and Doug Lanning's Who's Who in 1986. I visited Liverpool for the first time in 1982 and have now been around 40 times. Together with (fellow statistician) Eric Drogil, I have visited libraries and archives all over England, looking for new information on Liverpool FC and correcting old errors that have been made by others and copied again and again. Many ex-players have helped (and some haven't) also thank George Rowlands, Stephen Dore, Kjell Hansen, Gordon Small and many others for their help and time.

My most treasured item is a shirt certificate from 1812 - it's now in the museum at Anfield. My holy grail? I have heard there is a history book about Liverpool FC dating from around 1918. I would like to see that.

[My colleague] Sveinung Egeland has a collection of match programmes where all the information can be stored. It includes a who's who of more than 4,500 names. We also collect match facts for all first-team, reserve and junior games going back to 1882, and we buy birth and death certificates to get all the data as correct as possible. Last year we signed a long-term contract with the club to make our collection the LPC official archives.

What do my family and friends think? That I'm crazy!

Michael Robinson was with Liverpool for only 18 months in the early 1980s. In that time he played understudy to Kenny Dalglish and Ian Rush, scored 13 goals in 52 appearances, and won three winner's medals – League, Milk Cup and European Cup. Now 55, the former Republic of Ireland centre-forward lives and works in Madrid, hosting Informe Robinson (The Robinson Report) on Canal+ – has established himself as one of the most recognisable personalities in the Spanish media...

body beat us

You joined Liverpool from Brighton in August 1963 – didn't Everton want you too?

I had no previous notion that Liverpool were after me. I knew Seville in Spain had made enquiries as well as Everton and Newcastle. I'd spoken to Howard Kendall over the phone and he was very endearing. But I never wanted to sign for them because I'd grown up as a Liverpool fan when Everton were the enemy and the marauding club. Back in the 1950s they were known as the 'Bank of England club' with the manager Harry Catterick throwing money at anything that moved.

Joe Fagan and Bob Paisley were there at Anfield when I went to sign the contract and I asked them whether I could have a coffee or some fizzy water. "Here's a beer lad," Joe told me. "Don't think of me as a drink!" Later, when asked what questions I had only asked questions. "How do you want me to play?" Bob and Joe looked at each other, smiled, then Joe took charge. "We rather hope that you know how to play, otherwise we're going to lose a lot of money here." According to Sevenson, I knew I wouldn't fit back around my shoulder, sat me down and said, "Listen lad, we play 11 players here – just to make sure we aren't disadvantaged, in midfield when we get the ball we try to kick it to somebody dressed the same colour as us. If you can, Michael, kick it in the net, and if you can't, kick it to somebody who can. Then go into the box and go for it. Make sure the keeper doesn't expect it. There's no more to it than that?" I asked, "You'll find, Michael, that we leave players to figure it out for themselves. But we'll help along the way. This isn't a major science – you'll work it out."

How was Liverpool different to other football clubs?

The attitude throughout the club was that if we didn't do well, anybody could beat us. If we did do well, nobody could beat us. It was a humble attitude. I remember once before a game against Brentford in the League Cup, Graeme Souness had the dressing-room buzzing like we were playing against Manchester United. There was no complacency – ever. I used to have this recurring nightmare of Ronnie Moran's voice: "Give It! Get It! Go!" He was the mainstay for the coaching staff, the motivator.

How important was Graeme Souness?

Greente was my best mate, a wonderful man. Friendship apart he was the greatest footballer I've ever played with. Greente was also a misunderstood mad. There was a venom around him at times. But once you slipped off that venom, I found him a very personal, usually chip who was actually quite vulnerable about being a human being with emotions. To this day he still has very hard not to be this lovely, lovely person when really he is. We were born losers. He was the first to reasonably well spoken lad and I think that he viewed that as different and interesting whereas... was completely in awe of him as a person and a footballer. We became extremely close friends and he looked after me when the times were hard at Liverpool love Graeme dearly. He has to be the greatest leader I've ever come across in my life. When he left Liverpool to go to Sampdoria, it was like losing five players all at once.

You struggled to meet expectations at Liverpool...

I always scored against Liverpool whoever was playing for. But when you walked outside the left-hand dressing-room and down the stairs and past the imposing 'This is Anfield' sign before hearing 'You'll Never Walk Alone' you'd wait for the Liverpool team to run out. They seemed like giants and it felt like being a lamb led to the slaughter. That seemed to be the role of the opposition player. When

"Souness was the greatest leader I've ever come across in my life"

had the experience of being in the right-hand dressing room it was very different. I remember looking at the red jersey and it weighed so heavy. I'd walk out and touch the sign and 'You'll Never Walk Alone' was now for me... remember in some games half-wishing that I was that lamb again being led to the slaughter because there was no responsibility in that. Instead I had to be at the level of Liverpool Football Club and I wasn't too sure that I could be Anfield was far more imposing to me as a Liverpool player than as a visiting player. That played on my mind and I thought about it far too much.

But, the 1983/84 season was a memorable one for Liverpool, culminating in another European Cup final...

Being a part of it was just brilliant. When we got through the semi-final [beating Dinamo Bucharest] our options in the final were either Dundee United or Roma... asked Graeme who he wanted, thinking with the greatest respect to Dundee that we'd batter them. It was potentially... and as it turned out to be... my only European final so... hoped Dundee won. I wanted the easiest opposition. But Liverpool were in the business of collecting trophies and Graeme had seen it all before. When I told Graeme about this, he looked at me like... just tell me a true. My nickname was Cat because I always went in goal before training in the kickabout. "What are you going on about, Cat?" he stared at me. "We're the best team in the world. Nobody can beat us. It's impossible that we'll go to Rome and get beaten."

"When they asked me to work in the media I felt like a kid with a blank canvas"

The following season after a brief spell with QPR you headed for Spain...

I had a frivolous image of Spain that included summer holidays, parties, cheap alcohol and chasing girls. But also knew they were passionate about their football and they had these great lads called Real Madrid and Barcelona. When I first moved it wasn't a cultural choice, only moved because I wanted to play football. I came over on 7 January 1987. I didn't know whether I was going to be here forever. What I did know was that I was going to receive an education, an education that I wanted. But something strange happened, I enjoyed more or less everything about Spain and the way the Spaniards entertained me. I finished up realising that I had loads in common with the Spaniards.

Then after retiring, opportunities arrived to work in the Spanish media...

I couldn't believe it when they asked me. I only had 100 words in Spanish and most were expletives! It was as if I had been given a blank canvas to play with all the paints and all the brushes that I wanted and create something completely out of my own imagination. I felt like I was a kid and been locked in Toys R Us and everybody had gone out. I've been very fortunate ever since.

CARDI RETURN

The club from the capital returns to Anfield for the first time since Bill Shankly took charge of the Reds for his second season – indeed the fixture will take place almost 54 years to the day since that landmark clash. Shankly's last 4-0 to the Watersons that day with City's prolific inside-right Derek Yessent scoring twice. The manager himself will be out to see away who will threaten Liverpool's hopes to get one over the club with whom he enjoyed a fierce rivalry during his time as manager of Swansea City.

Q&A: CLAIRE ROURKE PRESENTER & PRODUCER AT LFC TV

First game you attended as a fan?
Away at Villa Park when I was 10. The football team my dad managed was playing in the area so he took the opportunity to take me to the match. It was so small and I remember seeing the pitch and just thinking how big everything was. I was in total awe.

Favourite player growing up?
Robbie Fowler gave me so many happy memories. I also loved Steve McManaman because he was just so exciting to watch. And another kind of don't want to admit because I work with him now and he won't let me forget it! Was Jason McAteer.

First player you interviewed?
Fernando Torres. On my second day in the job, I flew to Rotterdam where we were playing in a pre-season tournament. There was a fantastic goal in a Liverpool shirt and I had to interview him in Spanish.

How hard is it separating being a fan and doing your job?
I've been a Liverpool fan all my life so adjust myself incredibly fortunate to work for the club that I support. Admittedly when times are a little more frustrating you can take things to heart because you are a fan but ultimately, think being a fan only makes me more determined to make LFC TV a success.

Assuming Istanbul is your favourite game, what's next on your list?
That's so difficult but I am going to say Real Madrid at Anfield in 2009. I worked for Real prior to being at Liverpool so that game had extra significance for me. When Heli Span a lot of my colleagues were in the stadium for the decision, but when they came to Anfield on that night and experienced that atmosphere everything made sense.

Favourite away ground?
I honestly don't have a favourite. Last summer's game at the MCG will always stand out though. The rendition of 'You'll Never Walk Alone' was one of those 'we're there' moments.

Who would you still like to interview for LFC TV?
I've interviewed so many people who have made the club what it is today but one who we are yet to have on the red sofas and who we are desperate to, is Roger Hunt. I'd love to hear his Liverpool story first hand. But also for me it's the moments you get to interview people in. So with that in mind,

"Being a fan makes me more determined to make LFC TV a success"

I would love to be the one interviewing the Liverpool players when they have just won the league title. Hopefully I won't have to wait too much longer!

Away days

Before the trip to City a play-writing Red recalls past matches at the Etihad and Maine Road

I've been to see us play at Man City loads of times," says Bramwell and Redman Nicky All. Trips to Maine Road were one of the reasons why I got hooked on football at such a young age. My dad used to take me to away games and one of the first was at City around 1974. It finished in a 1-1 draw.

They had a strong team at that time with players like Mike Summerbee, Colin Bell, Fanny Lee and Denis Law. The atmosphere was great and I remember wanting to sample something like it again. I also thought the sky blue shirts versus our old red shirts on a rainy day in Manchester.

It usually rained when we went there made for a good spectacle. We were normally out in the big old stand called the Kippax, which was like the Kop but ran along the side of the pitch. They used to give us about a quarter of that and being by the home fans created a great atmosphere.

My only reservation about going to City was the fact that we rarely won. Between 1966 and 1974 we only enjoyed one victory at their place; they regularly caused us problems.

As Bob Paisley's side grew to be the best in Europe during the second half of the 1970s that changed. Winning at Maine Road became a regular occurrence. I remember one victory there in particular... continues Nicky

Maine Road/Etihad Stadium

"It was Easter Monday 1976 and we were in pursuit of the title. We needed a win to stay in contention with a QPR side that had been at or near the top all season. It was a tight game, with a Steve Heighway goal giving us a narrow 1-0 lead in the second half. Then David Fairclough, who was only 19, scored twice in the last three minutes to give us victory.

City's defenders, especially a guy called Mike Doyle, just couldn't live with him. There was a great photo in the newspaper the next day of Fairclough getting away from him despite Doyle almost dragging the shirt off his back. There must have been 10,000 of us there and afterwards we were all singing about winning the title. The journey home was great because there was a real sense of anticipation around becoming champions and the emergence of this great new player in Fairclough. Our last league game didn't take place until a few weeks later and we won 3-1 at Wolves to be crowned champions. It was Bob Paisley's first trophy.

What All describes as probably his most memorable trip to Man City's home came just over 12 months later. It was the FA Cup semi-final against

"Games at City were one of the reasons I loved football"

Everton and I was sat on the halfway line with my brother again in the Kippax. They built a makeshift banner right down the middle of the stand to divide the supporters.

Both sections of fans were singing at the top of their voices. There were neighbours on either side of the banner trying to out-sing each other. It was raucous but there was no trouble.

I don't think anyone would have put up with someone causing hassle. I'd say it was similar to the type of lively crowd you see at a South American football match now. Again, it was the type of experience that made me fascinated with the game. The match finished in a 2-2 draw.

Manchester City v Liverpool
5.30pm Thursday 26.12.13

Oct 2008:
Terror poses
as the Reds
came back to win 3-2

with Evertonians complaining that a disallowed goal from Brian Hamilton right at the end should have stood. They were probably right.

Four days later it was back to the same venue for the replay. "I was delighted there was another game ~~between the two clubs~~ atmosphere again. We won 3-0. The best performance Nicky has witnessed against City on their turf came in the same competition. It was the FA Cup quarter-final in 1988 and what stuck out in my mind. However one trip to City that meant nothing to us but will always be memorable occurred on the last day of the 1995/96 ~~season~~ finish any higher or lower. But City were in danger of relegation.

"With the score-line at 2-2 they thought a draw would keep them up and started wasting time. Then they found out that they needed a win, but it was too late. It was a bizarre finish to a game and, walking out of the ground afterwards, we couldn't believe what had just gone on.

The next time we secured a 2-2 draw was in 2003. By then the Blues ~~played at the old stadium~~ City of Manchester Stadium, or what is now known as the Etihad. "We haven't had too much success there. Admits. As a football fan you tend to remember victories rather than defeats. That's natural. You always want to forget a loss really quickly whereas you cherish a good win and every moment of it.

That's probably why the only game at the venue that easily comes to mind for me is the 3-2 victory in 2008. We were 2-0 down at half-time, before Fernando Torres scored twice to level it. When Dirk Kuyt pounced for the winner in the last minute it was superb. That raucous moment reminded me of being a kid. It was similar to being back in The Kippax celebrating among the away fans.

Nicky's Official LFC History Show will be coming to theatres in 2014. B

"It was raucous in the away end when we scored late on"

we won 4-0. We absolutely destroyed them. Liverpool were so good at the time that once they went 1-0 or 2-0 in front they just sat back and played on the break. With John Barnes and Peter Beardsley they had the ideal players for that type of game. It was like watching five-a-side. They kept counter-attacking and could easily have scored seven or eight.

"I usually remember cup matches or important league fixtures, they are

FOUNDATION

Working with children and adults to help inspire positive change through sport – follow us on Twitter @LFCFoundation to keep up to date with the community team's projects and activities

SKILLS & THRILLS

The Liverpool FC Foundation delivers a range of equality and inclusion programmes for children and adults both locally and overseas through a team of more than 20 qualified community coaches.

The programmes use the platform of football to provide opportunities to people of all ages and abilities from a range of diverse backgrounds that inspire positive change.

Reds midfielder Lucas and forward Luis Alberto recently dropped by one of the Liverpool FC Foundation's kick-about with its local stars. The Liverpool FC Foundation provides football sessions for more than 100 children and adults across Liverpool and Wirral every week.

The players met with a group enjoying their weekly football session at the Liverpool Respect4All centre based at St Margaret's CE School in Aigburth. The classes, which run four nights a week during school term are open to children and adults with severe learning difficulties, visual and physical impairment (ambulant and non-ambulant).

Liverpool FC Foundation trustee Lucas said: "It's been a real pleasure to visit the Respect4All programme again. The participants are so enthusiastic and I am proud to be an active member of the club's charity."

The Respect4All programme opened its second centre at Woodchurch High

Luis Alberto and Lucas (above) at the Respect4All session

School in Wirral last year to widen its provision in the community after the success of its Liverpool centre.

Ryan Moignard, project leader added: "Respect4All is a fantastic programme which is well attended and supported by the local community. We offer tailored sessions with specialist coaches to provide local young people and adults with fun, engaging classes which really bring out their personalities and help them to develop new skills."

IT'S ON THE CARDS

They're whimsical, inventive and often inspired – and the work of one talented Liverpool fan

When Liverpool fan's unique way of documenting each Reds match this season, Dave Williams, a designer and illustrator working in the city, produces a postcard after each first-team fixture and his inventive artwork is proving popular with supporters.

Dave, who's been going to Anfield for two decades, explains how it all started. "Before the season, I was browsing the internet and came across what's called 'fan art' for popular TV shows. The artists had created one image for each episode of a particular show, so by the end of the series there was a full set that gave a concise overview to the storyline. It led me to thinking about how that could work in sport and in particular football, so I designed a first postcard after the Stoke City match. I didn't really think ahead, so when people asked what would be next I had no idea, but I felt it was a project worth exploring. Also I used to collect football stickers as a kid, so the idea of creating something collectable really appealed to me.

Dave 30 gets his ideas during the game itself – keep an eye out for a brilliant moment worth celebrating. If that doesn't happen, try to put together a design relevant to the match itself: the opposition or any special landmarks that were passed during the game – such as Steven Gerrard's 100th goal. If I'm really struggling then I chat with my wife and steal some of her suggestions!

Could he do something similar for other clubs? "I've had requests, including one from my Evertonian brother Mark. But supporting Liverpool all my life has given me a huge knowledge bank for ideas and I don't think it would be possible to do it for another club without hours and hours of research. Plus I'd have to watch Everton games!

"After the first postcard, I had no idea if it would take off, but the feedback so far has been brilliant. I've been fortunate enough to sell postcards to supporters as far afield as Australia, the USA, Chile, India, Thailand, Sweden, Norway and Iceland!

The postcards can now be purchased as gifts, with half delivered in time for Christmas and the remainder sent weekly until the end of the season. All the details are at www.davewillbigcartel.com.

TOP OF THE KOPS part 3

Continuing our series in which Reds fans from top local bands pick their favourite Liverpool players for every occasion...

Fran Doyle from Small Pint

Good night out

John Barnes: We'd end up at a karaoke bar. He's got a good voice. Barney World's Moban and the Anfield Rap proved that.

Best dressed

I don't mind the stuff that Jamie Carragher wears. He's not trying to be someone he is not... just a Liverpool fan wishing goal that he feels comfortable in.

Front man

Peter Crouch: Because of his height, he's got stage presence. His dancing would also help. I'm not sure about his voice but he seems to have a lot of confidence and that helps.

The muscle

Three spring to mind. You could imagine Sami Hyypia with some dark shadow and an ear-piece organising everyone. He's got an intimidating voice too. You also need someone in security who stands out and looks a bit of a mad man so I'll go for Abel Xavier. Igor Becan can back them up.

Roadie

There's nobody else but Dirk Kuyt is there? He's a selfless worker keeping everybody on their toes... I imagine that he'd always get the job done. He always comes good.

Five-a-side

Meatball + goal. He's a big fella and obviously he'd fill the goal and the penalty area. That's what you need in five-a-side from a goalie. I'd also have Michael Jackson for his stopovers. Then I'd pick Serge from Kasabian because he's meant to be a good footballer. John Lennon would be in there purely because I like to go for a drink with him afterwards. Then Beyoncé (right) because she'd distract the opposition.

"Sami Hyypia could be on the door with dark shades!"

No 1 album or League title?

Liverpool win the league, definitely. Trade it off for a no 2 single.
